

Haider is a shy seven year-old who can't wait to grow up. Although he can barely speak when new people talk to him, he courageously pretends to be twenty when asked his age. A little scientist, he breaks apart his toys and then puts them back together. Other than his 'scientific endeavours' he is interested in playing with his younger sister, going to school and eating chips and chocolates.

Haider was first introduced to PWA when he was around three years old. He had suffered a fracture and had come to Civil Hospital Karachi. His doctors referred him to PWA. Haider was the first in his family to be ever diagnosed with Thalassemia.

Before Haider's family discovered PWA they had to go to multiple institutes to arrange blood for him. When his grandmother talks about the doctors who treated Haider and told them about PWA she is all prayers and praise.

Haider's father is a labourer and his mother works as a housemaid. It is heartbreaking to see your child in pain but it must be worse to know that the medicine your child needs is beyond your financial means. The cost of Haider's treatment seems an unconquerable mountain to both of his parents but with your help they can afford their child's life.”

"YES! YOU CAN LIVE A MEANINGFUL LIFE TOO BY LITTLE GESTURES THAT MEAN A LOT TO OTHERS"
