

Like many suffering from the lifelong disease called thalassemia, an eighteen year old boy named KAMRAN also became its victim.

Whilst having two perfectly healthy daughters, Kamran, the only son of Saleem and Asiya was first in the family to get diagnosed with thalassemia at the age of just six months.

He resided with his family at Mahahir camp and belongs to the Hazara community.

Kamran is a lively boy who seems optimistic about his future. He is currently in eighth grade and later in life aspires to become a doctor. Upon asking he mentioned that academic really intrigue him but at the same time he is also quite interested in learning and understanding the Holy Quraan.

Kamran is hardworking and his demeanour shows that he is filled with life and hope. Even while suffering from an immutable disease, he still lives a life like any ordinary eighteen year old. While his interest in fashion can not be overlooked, he shows love for food of different kinds.

Kamran's mother, Asiya shares her painful experience from Kamran's diagnosis to unaffordability of the treatment at a private hospital. Belonging from a working class family, Kamran's parents were unable to afford his treatment at a private hospital and soon he had to be transferred to Civil hospital's emergency so he would not succumb.

Kamran's mother has made sure her child never feels left out around other kids. She makes sure Kamran participates in every social activity and never lays behind when compared to other children his age.

Since Kamran's transfer for transfusions at PWA, his family has been very satisfied by the services provided here”

We would request you to be a ray of hope by sponsoring this bright lively child and help make his life better.”
