

Rabnawaz, a shy eight year old boy, seated there undergoing blood transfusion, evidently unhappy, having a look in his eyes that seemed as though he wanted to let his tears free, but he was desperately trying to control them plastering a forced smile in front of everyone. Nevertheless, he is a passionate, dedicated and patriotic young boy, who aspires to one day stand in the field and be able to serve his country by joining the Army.

Regardless of the fact that he suffers from thalassemia, Rabnawaz goes to Baldiya school everyday near his home on foot by himself. He likes to study and is thus not dependent on anyone when it comes to his studies. He hasn't told anyone in his school about his condition except for his class teacher just because he is afraid of how his classmates would treat him. At home he does not have much to do as his TV is not working anymore, and he likes to keep to himself. So he just spends his time studying and walking around the neighbourhood. Yes, he does not like talking much but he does love to travel to new places. He looks forward to visiting his village once every year where most his relatives are, especially his cousins who he misses and loves to hangout and play with.

He is the second youngest in his family having two brothers and two sisters. Yet, he is the only one who suffers from Thalassemia. His father works tirelessly at a low income job as a security guard to provide his family of seven, and his mother who is a housewife. The medical expenses of Rabnawaz have been impossible to fight off for his father while supporting his family and for this reason, we hope that you will sponsor Rabnawaz thereby helping him and his family lead a relatively easy going life and hopefully one day be a beacon of hope, by achieving his dreams, for other young children suffering from various illnesses.

There are countless other children like Rabnawaz who fight everyday to keep themselves sane, who learn to dry up their tears before they even start to appear, who want to achieve something good in their life that might make others' life better and easier, but they can not do this without your help. He is just a normal boy who wants to live a life where no one treats him differently just because he carries a burden with no fault of his own. Doesn't he deserve to smile like all of us?"
