

Rozi is a stern looking young man. Yet when he finds something amusing he merely bows his head and smiles shyly. He is the youngest of thirteen siblings and lives with his parents and eldest brother. When asked about his daily routine Rozi's heart wrenching reply was, "I spend my days getting injected with Desferol, and my nights sleeping".

Rozi wasn't the only child in his family to be diagnosed with this devastating illness. Rozi's cousin, and niece are also thalassemic. He belongs to a family that can barely make ends meet, let alone afford to educate their children. And where the expenditure needed for his treatment is financially whopping, it adds to the burden the family has to carry.

Thalassemia is an incurable and debilitating disease. It leaves the sufferer unable to perform any physically demanding activity. Thus like many other thalassemia patients, Rozi is mostly homebound.

Despite all the darkness of his disease Rozi's eyes shine when he talks about his mother's cooking. Generous sponsors like you have helped fund his treatment and kept the spark in him alive. We hope that people like you will continue in this kindness
